IS LIFE SUSTAINABLE?

In our approach to answering the question; "Is Life Sustainable?" we concur that the rights of the individual is crucial. However its value is negated unless there is an integrated and equal emphasis on the "responsibilities" of the individual (among other things). One without the other and both are dead, there is no life.

Building a magnificent legal edifice and system (that has no sense of the reality of time) to worship "human rights" must be balanced by the provision of a means for individuals to decide in microseconds actions that involve both rights and responsibilities.

How can even a hundred million judges "manage" the actions of 6 billion individuals who each day have 1000 actions each i.e. 6,000 billion actions per day?. What are the means to assist individuals "practice" human rights and responsibilities? We have ideas of how to manage these actions but they cannot be just for the actions of society relating to human rights.
