Freedom of religion should not be discriminated against in any way, shape or form..any religion... I had religious education in school growing in Australia, it gave me a great foundation and taught me very good morals, this education I received like all other subjects could have been accepted or rejected it was always your own choice, it was never something that had to be taken up. religious education was on the curriculum at all schools then. With society the way it is today it is not hard to see something is missing in people's lives, the void in their lives is this knowledge that is offered that is no longer mandatory in schools, and people try to fill that void with other things which are addictive, eg: alcohol, drugs, sex ect...which has a snowball effect on generations of other people and society.. people become co-dependant on things because they have something missing and they are in need to fill this void in them, the missing education is the most critical area in one's life, I am talking about all religions, we always had a choice which religion we learned. There should never be a law that prevents people from their rights to learn. They either reject or accept what they have been taught, at least that way people have made an informed decision, to not be informed-taught doesn't make sense..
