Submission Text:

In Australia we are lucky enough to have a say as to who is elected as a politician. We choose according to whoever we believe fits our standards and is supporting our moral and personal views of issues. These issues include human rights. Elected politicians should continue to be able to make judgements about how to protect human rights. This is the responsibility we have bestowed upon them by electing them into their place of power.

If a Government makes a poor decision regarding human rights we as the people can take steps in correcting it. However if a judge is put in place to make these decisions and makes the wrong one we have no way to change this.

In a country where our soldiers died for our freedom and rights I do not believe it is fair that the power of choosing elected politicians to make changes on our behalf should be taken away from us. If this is the case then our soldiers died for nothing.
