Submission Text:

There are two types of people, those whom are educated about cultures and those whom are educated within a culture....Sasha Davies (lol)

My submission is about the future hierarchy of Australian law that governs the rights of individuals and groups be it religious or not.

Australia is forever increasing in the diversity of cultures of our citizens. I actually find it hard to think of a culture that doesn't exist in Australia. One magnet is the fact that Australia is young and as a nation we are not extremely religiously or culturally bias.

Some Australian laws, and perceptions, do not reflect that in it's entirety. We are, after all, founded by the church of England and the Commonwealth still influence some of our laws and the Commonwealth is deeply religious as the head of state, The Queen, is to the Protestants as the Pope is to the Catholics. The Bible most currently used, in Australia and the world, is the King James Version.

Taking into account the conflict that is being witnessed worldwide and our mix of cultures here, I believe it would be wise to consider making Australia religiously neutral in everyway including law, possibly even breaking away from the Commonwealth, but that is another issue, we are not expected to follow Commonwealth law even though we are a part of the Commonwealth. The Governor General is our token head of State, lent to us by the Queen, lmao.

Even a simple law that states;

Any culture can practise and showcase any religious or non religious event, significant or in tradition to it's culture and/or religion, providing it is within Australian law, would equalise and minimalise any extreme influence of any one religion or culture thus clearing the way for Human Rights law reform and protecting the Australian way of life.

I truly believe Australia is ready, if not well over due, for such a reform to happen and more to the point, it may be the way to best secure our National Security.

Thanks 8)
